BY AND BY. Often little childish hearts, When yar fancied good they aigh, Meet the hope deferring words—
"By and by, dear; by and by."

"When will Johnny be a man Like papa, so tall and high? When can be sit up at night?" "By and by, dear; by and by." "When will winter go away? When will come 'Fourth o' July?' When can Nell long dresses wear?" "By and by, dear; by and by."

"By and by" the country seems the Where all glories waiting lie;
And when disappointments come, Tears are dried with "By and by." Each bright hope the young hearts form, Longings fond, ambitions high, Walt beneath the minbow-arch Of the land of "By and by."

Older grown, 'tis yet the same; Mocking oft our eager chase, We press on to "By and by." Honors there, and true love crowned, Gold, and all that gold can buy; Present toll, sick "hope deferred," We can bear till "By and by." Years roll on—some fair, some sad— Age and death are drawing nigh; Look we upward—onward still To the rest of "By and by."

What I Know of Farming.

BY HOUSER ORREITES

GROWING TIMBER-THEE-PLANTING.

In my judgment, the proportion of devoted to trees (other than fruit) is no less than one fourth; while, of farms ex-ceeding one hundred acres in area, that proportion should not be less than one-ing and meager crops. Ask an everage farmer in New England, in Virginia, in Kentucky, or in Alabama, why the crops of his section are in the average no better. nd the answer, three times in four, will be, "Our farmers have too much land"— that is, not too much labsolutely, but too much relatively to their capital; stock and general ability to till effectively. The habitual grower of poor crops will proffer this explanation quite as freely and frequently as his more thrifty neighbor. And what every one asserts must have a basis of truth.

Now, I do not mean to quarrel with the instinct which prompts my countrymen too buy and hold too much land. They feel, as I do, that land is still cheap almost neet, as 1.00, that is some need almost anywhere in this country—cheep, if not in view of the income now derived from it, certainly in contemplation of the price it must soon command and the income it might, under better management, be made to yield. Under this conviction—or, if to yield. Under this conviction—or, if you please, impression—every one is intent on holding on to more land than he can profitably till, if not more then he can comptly pay for. What I do object to is simply this—tha thousands, who have more land than they have capital to work profitably, will persist in half-filling many acres, instead of thoroughly farming one-half or one-third so many, and getting the rest into wood so fast as may be. I am confident that two-vantage to the inhabitants. It is a fruitgrowing, milk-producing, truck-farming county, closely adjoining the greatest city of the New Work; hence, one wherein land can be cultivated as profitably as almost anywhere clse—yet I am satisfied that half its surface may be more advantudgeously devoted to timber than to grass or tillage. Nay; I doubt that one acre in a hundred of rocky land—that is, land, ribbed or dotted with rocks that the bar or the rock-hook cannot lift from their beds, and which it will not as yet pay to blast—is now tilled to profit, or ever will be until it shall be found advisable to clear from Sacramento to Cheyenne, but the spring-time, and more leisure, is necessaor rising within two feet of the surface, ry to get an idea of and appreciate it, The time will doubtless arrive in which many fields will pay for clearing of stone that would not to-day; those, I urge, should be given up to wood now, and kept wooded until the hour shall have struck ing success, according to the chances of rees grow as they will, money can be more profitably and safely invested in lands covered by young timber than in anything else. The parent who would invest a few thousands for the benefit of remarks: invest a few thousands for the benefit of remarks:

children or grandchildren still young, may buy woodlands which will be worth twenty times their present cost within the next twenty years. But better even than this would it be to buy up rocky, craggy, naked hill sides and eminences which have been pastured to death, and, shutting out cattle inflexibly, scratch these over with plow, mattock, hoe or pick as circumstanding the plots of the past, and by the intelligent efforts of men dissatisfied with the methods of the past, argiculture is rapidly right toward the plow, mattock, hoe or pick as circumstances shall dictate, plant them thickly with Chestnut, Walnut, Hickory, White Oak and the seeds of Locust and White Pine. I say Locust, though not yet certain that this tree must not be started in garden or nursery beds and transplanted when two or three years old, so puny and feeble is it at the outset, and so likely to be smothered under leaves or killed out by its more flavored neighbors. I have experiments almost everywhere intelligence is the and the seeds of Locust and White Pine. I say Locust, though not yet certain that this tree must not be started in garden or nursery beds and transplanted when two or three years old, so puny and feeble is it at the outset, and so likely to be smothered under leaves or killed out by its more favored neighbors. I have experiments in progress not yet matured, which may shed light on this point before I finish these essays.

ceeding one hundred acres in area, that proportion should not be less than one third, and may often be profitably increased to one-half. I am thinking of such as are in good part superficially rugged and rocky, or sandy and sterile, such as New England, castern New York, northern New Jersey, with both slopes of the Alleghenies, as well as the western third of our continent, abound in. It may be that it is advisable to be content with a smaller proportion of timber in the Prairie States and the broad, fertile intervals which embosom most of our great rivers for at least a part of their course; but I doubt it. And there is scarcely a farm in the whole country, outside of the great primitive, forests in which openings have but recently been made, in which some but recently been made, in which some don every side as a reason for poor farming and menger crops. Ask an everage growing and maturing. I do not advise several in New England in Virginia, In white oak acorus only; within five years it will yield abundantly of hoop-poles, through the better, more promising half be lett to mature, as they should be; two years later, another and larger crop of hoop-poles may be cut, still sparing the best; and thenceforth a valuable crop of timber may be taken from that land; for, if cut at the proper season, at least two thrifty sprouts will start from every stump; and so that wood will yield a clear income each year while its best trees are steadily growing and maturing. I do not advise restriction to those two species of timber; but I insist that a young plantation of forest-trees may and should yield a clear income in every year after its fourth. come in every year after its fourth.

From Oregon to the States.

A friend has handed us a copy of the Portland, (Orgen) Commercial, of January 20th, containing a letter written by Joseph Gaston, Esq., an Oregonian now in Washington, formerly we believe a citizen of Belmont county, Some extracts from it descriptive of Oregon and the country be tween here and there, will be found read to attract the attention and afford subjects for interesting correspondence on a trip from the Pacific to the Atlantic, that any from the Pacific to the Atlantic, that any general notice must, of necessity, be desultory and unsatisfactory. But I know of nothing that will so well illustrate the greatness of our country, or the vastness of its empire, than such a trip. Within it is included every variety of soil and climate, and every stage and condition of physical and agricultural development and prosperity. Leaving the roses and strawberries in full feather at Portland on December 1st, (which, however, is exceptioncember 1st, (which, however, is exception inst as may be. I am confident that two-thirds of all our farmers would improve their circumstances and increase their incomes by concentrating their efforts, their means, their fertilizers, upon half to two-thirds of the area they now skin and skin, and giving the residue back to timbergrowing.

In my own hilly, rocky, often boggy Westchester—probably within six of being the oldest agricultural county in the Union—I am confident that, ten thousand acres might to-morrow be given, back to forest with profit to the owners and advantage to the inhabitants. It is a fruit-growing, milk-producing, truck-farming devised by energy and necessity to subal) we found oleanders, geraniums, &c. defying the climate at San Francisco while from Dutch Flat to Omaha a drea
